Each Blue Horse product had a label with a point value on it. The more expensive the product, the more points the label was worth. You could save Blue Horse labels and when you got enough points you could send them in and Blue Horse would send you back a prize. If you saved 25,000 points, you got the grand prize, a bicycle. Most of my classmates didn't save Blue Horse points.

About the book In this book a child paints a blue horse. Then, with growing confidence, the young artist joyfully paints a series of other animals in bold, unrealistic colors and forms. From celebrated author and illustrator Eric Carle, this is a book to give all children confidence in their own creativity.
